DID YOU KNOW: ORAL CONTRACEPTIVES

Recently, from March 15, 2016, Indian drug authorities have banned a list of 344 combination drug, of which, many of them were available as OTCs with famous and reliable brand names. Why this step was taken is an important point we should know since we, being the biggest market for aggressively marketed OTC products, were being affected by these products.

Combination drugs are basically the products which contain two or more active ingredients in a suitable combination. The ingredients are intended to show synergistic effect on the same disease or disorder, ideally with different ways of acting on the body and are should have different properties related to spreading into the body and getting at proper site through blood flow.

Basically, such products are formed to provide different ways of treating a disease or a combination of diseases by using single dosage form that is, a tablet or a syrup. Ultimate aim of these products is to improve patient compliance and encourage the patient to stick to the therapy. The products have been proved immensely beneficial in TB, AIDS, treatment, to some extent in diabetes and hypertension which come hand in hand in some patients, where patient adherence to the therapy is of utmost importance.

Then what leads us to avoid such a useful idea? The answer has several aspects.

1. The combination of these drugs is fixed in a given tablet and cannot be altered to suit the specific requirements of every patient, hence does not provide flexibility in therapy. Therefore, the number of patients actually needing the product narrows down, but due to availability and aggressive marketing they are prescribed even when not needed. This is irrational use of the combination drugs. This happens in case of OTC products also. For example,
2. Phenylephrine + paracetamol + caffeine, Citre-zine + paracetamol + caffeine, Paracetamol + phenylephrine + chlorpheniramine + dextromethorphan + caffeine. These combinations were being sold OTC as nasal decongestives and common cold remedies.
3. Few NSAIDs combinations are also in the banned list such as, Tamsulosin+Diclofenac, diclofenac+paracetamol+magnesium trisilicate, diclofenac+paracetamol injection. Such combinations had different side effects such as hepatotoxicity and stomach and intestinal ulcers.
4. Also, many of the irrational combination products used in treatment of diabetes, diabetes and hypertension combination were banned in this important decision. Still it is a small step towards ultimate aim of healthcare system is to give safest yet effective therapy to patient. Pharmacists, physicians and patients should contribute their knowledge and expertise in the same purpose.
